

The Colours of Feng Shui

By TY Tan

In this issue, I will be discussing how colours play a significant role within the practice of Feng Shui. When certain colours are used correctly, it will enhance the desired energy and wealth for individuals and owners of golf clubs.

For example, if your building or clubhouse was built after 2004 and is facing between 172.5 degrees to 202.5 degrees, painting its facing exterior red will enhance the flow of fortunate Chi into the building for fame and reputation and, at the same time, prevent accidents and injuries to young people. Having a black or blue theme in the North or North East will prevent fire hazards while having lots of golden coloured decorative items or painting in the East and North West will suppress the evil energy from creating havoc in the home.

Your lucky colour will depend on your personal Bazi or four pillars of destiny – it is not the same for everyone. To find out your lucky colour, you will need a professional Bazi reading of your birth chart.

The following is a guideline of what each colour represents in Feng Shui and Bazi.

Red Emits Fire Chi

(Fame and Reputation)

This is definitely Tiger Woods' lucky colour, but you don't see him wearing red shirts with red pants altogether because too much red can bring anger and restlessness and Tiger seems to know it.

Red is good for the location of the wealth star during this period of time. However, if used wrongly, it may cause problems and even sickness.

Green Emits Wood Chi

(Growth and Persistent)

Use green wherever you want to experience inspiration, growth and change. Avoid green if you have trouble focusing. When working with green colour in Feng Shui, it can be used in the East, Southeast and South areas of your space, but knowing precisely what stars are residing within these sectors requires fine tuning for optimum results.

Brown Emits Earth Chi

(Stability and Trust)

The element of earth can be freely used in a home or building such as South West or the North East sectors. Too much of the colour brown in your building may lead to a lethargic team.

Black or Blue Emits Water Chi

(Power and Wisdom)

Both of these colours are great for careers and ideal for any space where you want to assert your power, like an office or when a space needs cooling down from excessive fire chi to keep fire hazard away.

Orange or Golden Emits Metal Chi

(Justice and Righteousness)

This colour draws people to stand up for the weak and endure challenges. Incorporate orange wherever you are the underdog in a golf competition!

Remember, when colours are used properly, they will bring energy into your environment to achieve your desired goals.
