

Sector One

By TY Tan

I have written about different types of water dragon in feng shui in the past issues of this magazine without any reference to a house or any built structure. From this issue onwards, I will be writing about fortunate feng shui setting of houses of different facing directions. So, keep a look out for the settings that fit your home.

For properties facing between 157.5° to 172.5° (the first third sector of South) that were built after February 2004, they are in moderately good directions. It would be fortunate if they have the following settings:

Good External Landscape

- It is very fortunate to have a big beautiful natural mountain and small water located in the North direction of the house. If the natural landform externally does not have the setting, the remedy is to build a waterfall with a pond in the North section behind the house. This creates an artificial mountain and water dragon for the house, which will bring fortune to the residents.
- It will be great for career advancement if a big, beautiful natural mountain in the North stretches to cover Northeast and East, and there is also beautiful water towards the Northeast and East.
- It will have additional fortunate qi if there is either a big, beautiful natural water form towards the Southwest or a road coming from the Southwest.

Good Internal Layout

- The best location for the front main door is in the Southwest section of the house.

- There must be a back door in the North section.
- There must be an opened centre and the North section of the house must be well connected to the Southeast and West sections of the house.
- To enhance wealth luck further, the best sector to place an internal water feature, such as an aquarium, is in the North section of the house.
- Residents of this type of house have to use the back door more frequently to bring the auspicious qi into the house.

To balance the qi of the house, use the following colour schemes:

- A cool blue colour scheme at the North sector
- A red colour scheme at the South sector
- A golden colour scheme at the West sector

A building that conforms to the above external landform and internal layout is considered to be having good feng shui for those residing in it, in terms of wealth, health and career advancement. If the water feature and mountain towards the Northeast and East are ugly, there will be lawsuits.
